ATCO FRONTEC AND FORT MCKAY FIRST NATION OPEN CREEBURN LAKE LODGE

Evaluation Underway to Consider Doubling Capacity to 1,000 Rooms Due to Fort McMurray Market Interest

CALGARY, Alberta – ATCO Frontec and the Fort McKay First Nation have opened the first phase of their new Creeburn Lake Lodge, which provides much-needed, high-quality accommodation in the booming oil sands region 65 kilometres north of Fort McMurray.

The joint-venture partners plan to have all 500 rooms ready for occupancy by August and, due to market interest, evaluation is underway to consider doubling capacity to 1,000 rooms. This unique joint venture agreement to build much needed accommodation was only announced last October.

“Rooms are in high demand and we expect to be at capacity when the Lodge is fully-operational in August,” said Harry Wilmot, President, ATCO Frontec. “We are delighted to provide a facility that offers a high level of comfort and amenities to people working away from home in the oil sands region.”

The 130,000 square foot Lodge, manufactured by ATCO Structures, includes a dining room, licensed lounge, games room, fitness centre, meeting rooms, television rooms, laundry facilities, and on-site parking with plug-ins. Every room features a 26-inch LCD TV/DVD system, high speed Internet, and individual environment controls. Companies operating in the area are encouraged to contact ATCO Frontec for availability. Additional information is available at www.creeburnlakelodge.com.

Chief Jim Boucher of the Fort McKay First Nation added: “This project has delivered numerous opportunities for our community. Creeburn Lake Lodge is yet another example of the progressive work we are doing as a First Nation. We look forward to partnering with ATCO Frontec on new projects in the near future.”

The partnership continues to reflect ATCO Frontec’s ability to work collaboratively with Aboriginal and First Nation groups to deliver business opportunities that result in long-term, mutually beneficial benefits and encourage capacity building in the communities where the company operates.

The Fort McKay First Nation is comprised of Cree and Dene people who have a strong historical attachment to the region and has established a wide range of oil industry-based companies that provide employment opportunities and revenue for the community. Visit www.fortmckay.com for more information.
